Les fonctions parent/enfant props avancée

La classe parent app transmet sa fonction addArticle() au composant enfant <form> via le props 'addArticle', on precise 'this' pour préciser

```
qu'on parle de la fonction du parent qui s'exécute, pour récupérer les information de l'enfant on précise 'this' dans le context enfant.
JS App.is JS Form.is import React, { Component } from 'react';
       import '../App.css';
       import Form from './Form';
       import ItemList from './ItemList';
       class App extends Component {
        state = { articles : [] }
       _addArticle = (article)=>{
          this.setState({articles : [...this.state.articles, article]});
          article.id = this.state.articles.length + 1;
          console.log(this.state.articles);
        render() { Résultat
           return (

             <h2>Liste de course en construction</h2>
             < Form formTitle="Ajouter un article" addArticle={this. addArticle}
                                                                                    LINE 24. NO UUP (ICACE PIOPS ACCOMED
             < ItemList />
                                                                                  ▼ {name: "pain", quantity: 0} 🗊
                                                                                   id: 1
                                                                                     name: "pain"

                                                                                     quantity: 0
                                                                                   ▶ proto : Object
```

```
JS App.js
                 JS Form.js X
        import React from 'react';
        class Form extends React.Component{
            state = {
                name: ',
                quantity: 0
            };
            handleSubmit = (oEvt) \Longrightarrow {
                oEvt.preventDefault();
                console.log(this.state);
                this.props._addArticle(this.state);
            render(){
                return(

                         <h3>{this.props.formTitle}</h3>
                         <form onSubmit={this._handleSubmit} >
                             <input type="number" placeholder="q</pre>
                             value={this.state.quantity} onChang <input type="text" placeholder="art</pre> value={this.state.name} onChange={(
                             <button type="submit">ajouter</putt</pre>
                         </form>

        export default Form;
```